

Devil's Two Rivers and the Dream: The American Association for State and Local History

The Devil's Two Rivers is a region of North Dakota that is home to a number of historical sites, including the Fort Union Trading Post and the Knife River Indian Villages National Historic Site. The region is also home to the American Association for State and Local History (AASLH), a national organization that provides support and resources to individuals and organizations working in the field of state and local history.

The Making of Harpers Ferry National Historical Park: A Devil, Two Rivers, and a Dream (American Association for State and Local History) by Teresa S. Moyer

★★★★☆ 4.1 out of 5

Language : English
File size : 17696 KB
Text-to-Speech : Enabled
Screen Reader : Supported
Enhanced typesetting : Enabled
Word Wise : Enabled
Print length : 266 pages

AASLH was founded in 1940 by a group of historians and museum professionals who were concerned about the lack of support for state and local history. The association's mission is to promote the study, preservation, and interpretation of state and local history in order to connect people to their communities and to inspire them to be active citizens.

AASLH offers a wide range of programs and services to its members, including educational programs, publications, and technical assistance. The association also works to advocate for the preservation of historical sites and the promotion of state and local history education.

AASLH is a valuable resource for anyone interested in state and local history. The association's programs and services help to support the work of historians, museum professionals, and other individuals and organizations who are working to preserve and interpret the history of their communities.

The Devil's Two Rivers Region

The Devil's Two Rivers region is located in western North Dakota, near the confluence of the Missouri and Yellowstone rivers. The region is home to a number of historical sites, including the Fort Union Trading Post and the Knife River Indian Villages National Historic Site.

The Fort Union Trading Post was established in 1829 by the American Fur Company. The post was a major trading center for the fur trade in the upper Missouri River region. The post was also a major stop on the Overland Trail, which was used by settlers traveling to the Oregon Territory.

The Knife River Indian Villages National Historic Site is home to the remains of three Hidatsa Indian villages. The villages were occupied from the 16th to the 19th centuries. The site is a National Historic Landmark and is one of the most important archaeological sites in the United States.

The Devil's Two Rivers region is a beautiful and historic area. The region is home to a number of natural and cultural attractions, including the Missouri River, the Yellowstone River, the Badlands, and the Black Hills. The region is also home to a number of museums, historical sites, and cultural events.

The American Association for State and Local History

The American Association for State and Local History (AASLH) is a national organization that provides support and resources to individuals and organizations working in the field of state and local history. The association's mission is to promote the study, preservation, and interpretation of state and local history in order to connect people to their communities and to inspire them to be active citizens.

AASLH offers a wide range of programs and services to its members, including educational programs, publications, and technical assistance. The association also works to advocate for the preservation of historical sites and the promotion of state and local history education.

AASLH is a valuable resource for anyone interested in state and local history. The association's programs and services help to support the work of historians, museum professionals, and other individuals and organizations who are working to preserve and interpret the history of their communities.

The Devil's Two Rivers region and the American Association for State and Local History are both dedicated to preserving and interpreting the history of their communities. The region is home to a number of important historical sites, and the association provides support and resources to individuals and organizations working in the field of state and local history.

Together, the Devil's Two Rivers region and AASLH are working to connect people to their communities and to inspire them to be active citizens.

The Making of Harpers Ferry National Historical Park: A Devil, Two Rivers, and a Dream (American Association for State and Local History) by Teresa S. Moyer

★★★★☆ 4.1 out of 5

Language : English
File size : 17696 KB
Text-to-Speech : Enabled
Screen Reader : Supported
Enhanced typesetting : Enabled
Word Wise : Enabled
Print length : 266 pages

The Rise of the Sharing Economy: A Transformative Force Shaping the Modern World

The sharing economy, a revolutionary concept that has reshaped various industries, has become an integral part of the modern world. From its humble beginnings to its...

Midsummer Night's Dream: Maxnotes Literature Guides

Midsummer Night's Dream is one of William Shakespeare's most beloved comedies. It is a whimsical and enchanting tale of love, magic, and...