

The Great Peshtigo Fire: The Time Train Adventures

The Great Peshtigo Fire was one of the deadliest wildfires in American history. It burned over 1.2 million acres of land in Wisconsin and Michigan, and killed over 1,200 people. The fire was so intense that it created its own weather, and it burned so hot that it melted the sand in the ground.

The Great Peshtigo Fire started on October 8, 1871, in the town of Peshtigo, Wisconsin. The fire quickly spread, fanned by strong winds and dry conditions. By the end of the day, the fire had burned over 100,000 acres of land.

On October 9, the fire continued to spread, reaching the town of Marinette, Wisconsin. The fire destroyed the town, and killed over 500 people. The fire then crossed the border into Michigan, where it burned over 600,000 acres of land.
