Excerpt

Emma stared at Ethan across the crowded room. He was everything she'd ever wanted in a man. He was tall, dark, and handsome, with piercing blue eyes and a devilish grin. And he exuded an aura of power and confidence that made her heart pound.

But she knew better than to get involved with him. He was dangerous. She could see it in his eyes. But she couldn't resist his forbidden touch.

"Excuse me," he said, his voice a low murmur. "May I have this dance?"

Emma hesitated for a moment, but then she nodded. She placed her hand in his and he led her to the dance floor.

As they danced, Emma felt herself drawn to Ethan. He was unlike any man she'd ever met before. He was dangerous, but he was also kind. He was ruthless, but he was also passionate. And she couldn't resist his forbidden touch.

As the night went on, Emma and Ethan found themselves alone in a secluded corner of the room. He leaned in close, his breath warm on her neck.

"I want you," he whispered.

Emma's heart pounded in her chest. She knew she shouldn't, but she couldn't resist his forbidden touch any longer.

And with that, their lips met in a searing kiss.
